If you care to be your own painting contractor here's a pointer for you.

P. N. Lowe of Kankakee, Ills., painted his house by buying the paint and hiring painters by the day.

He used Devoe lead-and-zinc Paint and the job cost him $35.00. The best bid he could get from a contractor was $49.00 for a lead and oil job.

He got a good job and saved money by using Devoe.

A farmer near Whitewater, Wis., was going to paint his house; and it required $18.75 worth of lead and oil to do it.

Our agent, G. W. Sperbeck, sold him Devoe lead-and-zinc Paint; ten gallons cost him $16.00 and he had a gallon left; net cost: $14.40 for Devoe paint against $18.75 for lead and oil.

He was so pleased with the job and the saving, that he told all his neighbors about it; and they have since painted with Devoe lead-and-zinc Paint

Wm. Keegan, a farmer near Bear Valley, Wis., lately painted his house.

It had always taken 12 gallons of mixed paint; and he didn't believe 7 gallons of Devoe lead-and-zinc would do a good job.

But he used only 6 and took the 7th back to H. Toms, Richland Center, Wis., the dealer who sold it. They were both surprised.

A neighbor of Mr. Keegan used Devoe lead-and-zinc Paint on his house as a result. Devoe lead-and-zinc is economy.

Painters are sometimes hard to convince, when it comes to the question of the right paint to use; they are inclined to think there's nothing so good as lead and oil.

There's something better; and painters who find it out, make money by the knowledge.

Chris Kipfer, leading painter of Morton, Ill , used Devoe lead-and-zinc Paint exclusively; but even with his experience, the covering capacity fooled him.

He ordered 8 gallons for his own house and had three gallons left.

Good thing for painters; for themselves and their customers.

If you could save a third of your estimated cost on all things you buy, you'd think you were pretty lucky.

A. Needham of Ida Grove, Iowa, did it with Devoe lead-and-zinc paint. The dealer told him six gallons would be required to paint his house. He had two gallons left; returned to the dealer.

Devoe lead-and-zinc paint covers more square feet than even experts estimate; its the paint to use, unless you want to waste money.
